Trends and Influences

The Social Security Administration (SSA) keeps track of what the most recurring names in the country are based on Social Security Card registrations. It is interesting to see how names are recycled over the years and the many forms they take. It also shows the various trends and changes in naming that come about with time.

The trends in baby names have been continuously evolving as the years pass. Socio-cultural factors heavily influencing naming trends. Names from the Bible have always been popular choices. Other religious books, as well as character names from Literature, Movies, and TV shows contribute to the pool of names. Mythology is a good source with names like Athena or Cleo. Many kids are named after athletes, actors, or artists who are popular at the time. Some opt for unusual names that will make the child stand out. The political situation also largely influences naming trends. The exponential increase in popularity of the name 'Kamala' after Kamala Harris is an example here. Certain names that are relatively obscure take the spotlight if a crowd-favorite politician is running for office. Another factor that has a huge influence on naming is the naming of celebrity kids. Many people follow the footsteps of their favorite celebrity and name their own children the same.

The Ones that Stay

While new names are cropping up more, classic and traditional names that have been around for a long while continue to be popular choices. Over the past few years, the names Olivia, Emma, Ava, Sophia, and Isabella have stayed on the top of the list of girl names consistently. For baby boys, the name Liam has stayed at number one for almost five years now. Other names that have refused to move from the top of the lists include Noah, Oliver, William, and Elijah. Some of these names are traditionally from the Bible or derivations of those names. They are well-known and easy to learn. The classic names have strong historical roots as well. It is safe to say that the traditional names will not be going anywhere for a long while.

The Newer Ones

In recent years, some new and unusual names have started appearing on the scene as well. These might not be names that you would have heard in the 1960s, but they are becoming increasingly popular. A lot of parents also opt for gender-neutral names for their children, such as Dakota or Ezra. This is an increasingly common trend.

The following are lists of some of the most popular names for baby girls and baby boys in the country in 2021. Take a look at these names, and you might just find the perfect one for your baby.
