Things to Remember

- Whenever you buy clothes for your kids, look for clothes made of soft materials that will keep them comfortable.
- Make sure that they are easy to care for and wash friendly. Keep in mind that the price of an outfit need not determine its quality.
- Avoid overly long dresses, long ribbons or strings, and tight fitting or long-sleeved clothes that leave no room for air. This can make them cranky and irritable.
- Go for clothes that can be easily put on and taken off.
- Stretchable clothes or outfits with elastic waistbands are very handy to use and can be worn over a period of time as they grow.
- From spring on, the temperatures will be rising although it won't be as warm as summer. As summer gets closer, light weight clothes and breezy jackets might be the best choice. This season brings many outings and vacations or beach days with it.

If your child is very young and not walking around too much, go for bodysuits and trendy prints to stay in style. Toddlers can wear lightweight denims or shorts. Hats are a useful accessory during this period to protect them from the sun. Make sure that they are not overexposed to ultraviolet rays if they are staying in the sun for too long. However, this does not mean that they have to wear full body suits. One-piece garments and loose outfits that are light and airy will work great here. Organic fabrics and material that dries quickly would be very handy. Go for bright and warm colors to mirror the mood of the season.

Dressing your Kids

Dressing their kids can be a frustrating activity for many parents. It might take way too much time to get them to wear the right outfit and to calm them down if they are in the middle of a tantrum.

Here are some tricks that might help you:

- Leave enough time for dressing and plan in advance what they will wear or what the options are.
- Give your kids a limited number of options to choose from, keeping in mind the occasion and the weather. They are more likely to choose quickly if they have to choose from two options than from three.
- Be patient with them and make the entire process fun for them. Make it full of laughter and cuddles from the beginning so that they are less likely to throw a fit.
- You can compartmentalize their wardrobe based on the season. Put away the clothes they might not be using in a long time. So, they are less likely to throw a tantrum over wanting to wear a bikini in winter if they can't access it directly.
- Distract them with conversation about the day or about something they are interested in. This will keep them engaged and give them a sense of importance.
- Make sure that you don't force your kids into clothes that they are uncomfortable with or cause irritability. Some kids may be allergic to certain fabrics and develop rashes or itching. Be attentive to their responses to various clothes as they might not always be able to tell you what is wrong. Their crankiness might actually be caused by an outfit that is making them itchy.
- If there are any spontaneous games you can play with them to make them cooperate, try those. This will help to keep them occupied and not fretting about the process.

Wardrobe Matters

- Try to have a system whereby all their clothes can be kept organized. Otherwise, just finding the right clothes can become a hassle.
- Start as early as possible on creating an organized system. Spend some time to figure out what goes where.
- It will also help you to discard of clothes that you no longer need or that they have outgrown. Go through all their clothes and decide what they can still wear. Remove the ones that they don't use anymore or the ones that are too damaged. You can donate those or give them to someone else who might need them if they are in good shape.
- Arrange clothes by size and by seasons as it will be of great practical use.
- You can also arrange them based on those that need ironing and those that do not. The ones that need ironing are usually special-occasion outfits which can be hung in the cupboard.
- Keep the ones that you will use the most at the most accessible place. Keep them in different drawers according to use.
- You can write sticky notes or label the drawers to know which one has shorts and which one has bodysuits.
- Do this organizing once at the beginning of every season so that you can keep away all the clothes that you won't be using in that season. This will save space and give the wardrobe a spacious feel.
